

65 years of WAR ON WORKERS

In 1953, wealthy businessmen intent on crushing the American labor movement held a secret meeting. Their mission? Break labor from within by lobbying for laws that permit workers to not pay dues for union representation.

The group became the National Right to Work Committee, a $33 million anti-worker lobby group today that has been destroying workers' rights for nearly 65 years, and was the legal arm behind the Janus vs. AFSCME case.

Since then, they've been joined by dozens of groups funded by millionaires and billionaires who are hell-bent on destroying unions and the good public service work OCSEA members do.

Anti-union groups, like the Freedom Foundation and the Buckeye Institute here in Ohio, are taking advantage of the recent Janus decision, spending millions in social media ads and going door to door to try to get you to quit your union. Beware, because their tactics include:

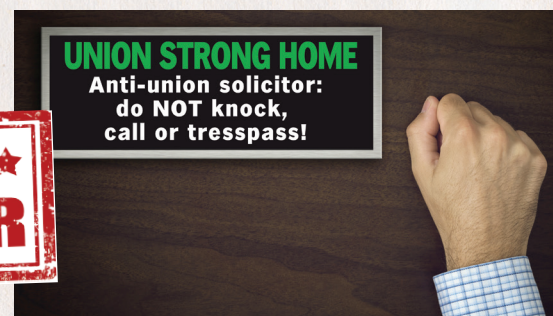

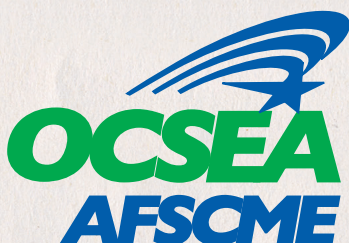

- Collecting your personal data, including cell numbers, address and emails
- Harassing union members at home
- Deceptive (and expensive) mailers
- Lies over email, the web and social media

If these groups contact you, tell them to get lost. They are spending millions to get you to quit your union. If they call, email or visit your home, tell them you are sticking with the union! Return to sender or trash any anti-union mailers!

The millionaire Illinois Governor Bruce Rauner drafted anti-union public employee Mark Janus to be the "face" of the case. Weeks after the case was decided, Janus left state service to work for an anti-labor group.

Union membership is on the rise. Since 2016, AFSCME has increased its membership by 18,000 despite attacks.
